Author: Classified

The Hague, 19 January 2023

Crises are unpredictable by their very nature, and it is therefore impossible to predict them. However, it is possible to take steps to deal with them most effectively when they occur.

In this sense, the agencies and firms specialising in international crisis management, which offer their services during the Day of Crisis, are already preparing for all eventualities, in order to effectively serve the actors on the international scene who may call on them.

According to reliable and trustworthy sources, whose object is the analysis and study of these crises, several themes are particularly sensitive in the DoCWorld, and could be at the heart of a future crisis. Among these themes, experts identified the likelihood of serious disputes arising involving trading activities, cyberspace, international criminal activities and labor issues.

Such topics are also mentioned in an unsigned note that has been found in the lobby of the Taina Hotel [see attached].
